

Energy Edge Consulting to Offer New Services to Energy Consumers

Energy Management Services to Complement Existing Energy Consulting Services

Houston, TX (PRWeb) October 13, 2015 -- Energy Edge Consulting, a leading provider of energy consulting and advisory services, is now offering energy management services targeted at helping end use energy consumers reduce energy usage. Energy Edge can now assist clients in minimizing the per-unit cost of energy consumed as well as minimizing the quantity of energy consumed.

Energy Edge can perform a variety of energy audits including ASHRAE Level I, II and III audits, building commissioning and retro-commissioning, and customized energy studies, all of which will provide clients with no cost, low cost, and capital project recommendations to reduce energy usage. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, 30% of the energy we use is wasted, which means 30% of the energy we consume can be recaptured, often through no cost and low cost changes to equipment and operations.

In addition to audit services, Energy Edge offers a full suite of other energy management services including Energy Star certification, energy usage benchmarking, utility rebate management, and behavior based energy conservation planning. These services can be provided on a standalone basis, or as part of a broader energy management engagement.

Brian Walker, President of Energy Edge Consulting, stated that the new services will build on the value the firm already provides to clients. "The Energy Edge team has been managing electricity and natural gas commodity costs for clients for nearly seven years. Adding services designed to help clients reduce electricity and natural gas consumption is complementary and leverages the deep understanding we have of our clients energy spend."

As part of its delivery plan for these services, Energy Edge has added Colby May, CEM to its team of energy experts. Mr. May is a Certified Energy Manager, and has been involved in the energy management arena for 13 years, having provided in depth energy audits and energy management consulting to over 1,500 clients globally.
